

Tracking the 2018 GRAMMY Jewelry Trends

Did you happen to catch music's biggest event last night? The 60th Annual GRAMMY Awards were broadcasted live from Madison Square Garden in New York and was quite a night to remember! Graciously hosted by James Corden, the show featured jaw-dropping performances and a strong message for change in 2018. Much like the Golden Globe awards earlier this month, most in attendance wore white roses to stand in solidarity against gender discrimination and promote the #timesup movement.

So get this—

IBM Watson made its debut on the red carpet this year. The bot meticulously scanned every ensemble of the night, analyzing trends and comparing them to years past. But rest assured, Stuller fashionistas were also busy scanning the event for hot 2018 Grammy jewelry trends. We've been drooling over the dramatic diamond jewelry worn by leading ladies like Camilla Cabello and Cardi B while guys like Khalid and Donald Glover beamed brightly in all-white attire.

Here are the 2018 GRAMMY jewelry trends we absolutely adored—

Sharp-Shaped Earrings

Though she didn't receive much camera time, Queen Bey was blingin' this year, reportedly wearing nearly seven million dollars worth of diamond jewelry (OMG). Her platinum kite-shaped earrings held nearly 70 carats of sparkling diamonds. Meanwhile, Lauren Akins, Thomas Rhett's wife, wore simple triangle-shaped earrings while Bebe Rexha's were ornately-embellished and teardrop-shaped.

A post shared by Lorraine Schwartz (@lorraineschwartz) on Jan 28, 2018 at 8:09pm PST

Plenty of Pink

Once again, pink made a splash on the red carpet. No, I'm not talking about singer-songwriter Pink! – though she did give one heck of a performance towards the end of the night. I'm referring to the rosy shade that makes the stars glow so graciously. Andra Day looked incredible in her red and pink blazer, while Zayn Malik stole the show with his mauve-colored suit. Even Lady Gaga dripped in pink during her performance as she donned a marvelous pair of morganite drop earrings.

A post shared by POP STYLE (@popstyle.official) on Jan 29, 2018 at 12:30pm PST

Smoky Stones

On the red carpet, Lady Gaga (yes, we're talking about her again) flashed black diamond jewelry in the form of elegant chandelier earrings and an ornately-decorated snake ring. Chrissy Teigen wore interestingly designed statement earrings with both black and white diamonds. And did you see Rihanna as she accepted a GRAMMY with Kendrick Lamar? She wore those cognac quartz earrings complete with a chocolate diamond necklace.

A post shared by chrissy teigen (@chrissyteigen) on Jan 28, 2018 at 7:42pm PST

For the Men

The men on the red carpet brought their A-game with jewelry that nearly outshone the ladies' and created their own striking 2018 GRAMMY jewelry trends. Both Nick Jonas and Sam Smith each wore right-hand signet rings with dark stone centers—a tasteful and trendy choice for men. We spotted layers of chunky diamond chains while Jaden Smith wore a pair of oversized curb link chains with his quirky ensemble.

Finally, Elton John wore a graduated pearl necklace under his heavily-embellished blazer. In fact, guys sporting pearls on and off the red carpet seems to be a growing trend on our radar.

A post shared by Miley Cyrus (@mileycyrus) on Jan 28, 2018 at 7:34pm PST

What were some of your favorite 2018 GRAMMY jewelry trends? Share with us in the comments below!